1: Metraux E-5 (1934-1935) 1940
OY2 Easter Islanders OY2

The term ivi-atua (lineage of the gods) is interpreted by the present population as magician or sorcerer, and they use the same word for a charm or a spell. The koromaki (the one who violently desires something) were also in the category of priests. Usually the word koromaki was followed by the mention of the thing wanted, as rain, fish, and so on. These koromaki were expert in casting spells and had the power to kill enemies or to benefit people who resorted to them. Apparently their function was similar to that of the ivi-atua. Here again is manifest the tendency to represent all the ancient priests as wizards.

In Mangareva the general term for priest is taura; Laval gives it as tahura. The name tahura on Easter Island is applied to the servants of the king, but as tahura may also mean "expert", the fact that the king's attendants were tahura does not imply that they were priests.

Divine Possession

It is evident from the allusions of the missionaries that in Easter Island, as in all of Polynesia, the gods were supposed to take possession of the priests and to use them as mediums between themselves and the people. The present natives remember that when a priest was possessed by a god, he spoke in a shrill, high-pitched voice. In the legend of the young men who pretended to be Makemake, it is said that " . . . they made their voice like that of a god (hakaatua i te reo)." The word used in Easter Island, as in most of Polynesia, to mean possession by a god was the verb uru (to penetrate, to enter). To express the action of the priest Uru-a-rei, who tried to exterminate the Miru by means of religious rites, my informant used the word uru and translated it "to make sorcery." The story tells that the priest was dizzy because he turned round and round (miniro) in order to make his uru.

Sorcerers

Sorcery seems to have been practiced on Easter Island to much the same extent and in much the same manner as on other Polynesian islands. Inspirational priests (ivi-atua) or sorcerers (tangata taku) had at their service familiar spirits through whom they cured or killed people or accomplished difficult tasks (p. 319). There were numerous charms connected with every action. There was even a spell to make people hurry.

A person who wanted to get rid of an enemy called in a sorcerer, to whom he presented food cooked especially for the purpose. The magician dug a hole in the ground and in it he buried a white cock with head turned down. The place was trodden upon, and after a few days the cock's death was followed by that of the person against whom the magic rite was directed. Such procedure was known as taku mo mate (charm for death). This typical prac-

1: Metraux E-5 (1934-1935) 1940
OY2 Easter Islanders OY2

796 by a continuous round of festivities and banquets. Possibly a certain significance is to be attached to the statement by Gana (86, p. 33) that while the people were gathered at Orongo "the men and the women appeared entirely naked in public dances, making indecent and immoral gestures." If this is true we may suppose that erotic dances were performed at Orongo as in the Marquesas, in order to favor fertility in nature.

786 535 831

266 796 The name of Mataveri is associated in the minds of the natives with cannibal meals. Both Routledge and I were told that the mata-toa (warriors) who gathered at Mataveri, both before and after the principal feast at Orongo, were then more prone than at any other time to indulge in human flesh. Quite near Mataveri is a cave called Cave-of-the-cannibal, Ana-kai-tangata, where 532 tradition says that the victims were devoured. On the vault of this cave are painted birds and Routledge saw the sketch, now crumbled away, of a European boat.

796 787 In January (according to Routledge, July) all or part of the people who had been in Mataveri ascended to the stone village of Orongo by way of a special path which still exists and is called "the road of the ao." Generally the contestants in the race were named by priests (ivi-atua) who had dreamed that a certain mata-toa would become a bird-man (tangata-manu). After the race a disappointed contestant might accuse the priest who had named him as bird-man of being a liar or he might hopefully defer his prophesied victory to a later year or to one of his descendants.

796 Generally the actual search for the first manu-tara egg was entrusted to men called hopu who supposedly acted as servants of the contestants. Usually each competitor sent only one hopu. However, instances are recorded of one hopu serving two employers and of one contender having two hopu. Both Routledge and Tepano say that there might be more than one bird-man. Probably there was one supreme bird-man and several supernumeraries whose hopu had found eggs after the first one. In the race held four years before the custom was abandoned, four tribes took part and there were ten winners. Two hopu had two employers each, while three contestants hunted their own eggs, one acting also for another man. Routledge regards this as a sign of decadence. However, so little is known about the cult that it is dangerous to speak of degenerate forms in reference to it. Tepano was quite firm in his statement that the competitors themselves sometimes looked for the eggs. The early missionaries and travelers who described the egg race were of the opinion that the candidates to the title acted on their own account and that it was their courage or their skill which was rewarded. Thomson's (215, p. 483) version may have some validity:

> The race for the distinguished honor of bearing the first egg was an occasion of intense excitement. The contestants were held in check at Orongo until the auspicious moment arrived, and the scramble commenced at the word "go" pronounced by the king.